Great interest is shown in puppies and dogs, and people are constantly looking to increase their knowledge about this intriguing animal which, over the years, has become both a servant and a companion to man. If you are a prospective dog owner, it is vitally important to gain as much knowledge as possible. There will be various questions that you will need to answer before making a final decision about the right dog for you, taking into consideration how well it will fit into your family life and requirements. Dogs in the Working group were developed to perform a wide variety of tasks, such as herding, droving, pulling, hauling, hunting, rescuing and guarding. The very nature of many of these tasks requires a big, strong dog. Working dogs have always been viewed as real assets to their owners and have worked with man replacing larger animals such as horses when none such animals were available.
